Kevin Johnson, CEO of Starbucks, recently found himself in just such a situation. And his response is the textbook example of what a business leader should do. #1: Take a "non-defensive" attitude. This is probably the most important thing you can do. I think this leadership post is more about Starbucks (which is a large corporation & extremely successful) than about the Red Hen Res (small but presumably good). The idea that we can learn lessons from others is a function of the maturity of a person than anything else.

Dec 02, I was an employee when Starbucks only had four stores. I was sent to Italy on a trip for Starbucks and came back with this feeling that the business Starbucks was in was the wrong business. Starbucks Is Closing More Than 8, Stores--and Teaching 2 Important Leadership Lessons in the Process The coffee chain says, "This is just one step in .
